Stress Management

A lecturer, when explaining stress management to an audience, raised a glass of water and asked, "How heavy is this glass of water?"

Answers called out ranged from 20g to 500g. The lecturer replied, "The absolute weight doesn't matter. It depends on how long you try to hold it."

"If I hold it for a minute, that's not a problem. If I hold it for an hour, I'll have an ache in my right arm. If I hold it for a day, you'll have to call an ambulance. In each case, it's the same weight, but the longer I hold it, the heavier it becomes."

He continued, "And that's the way it is with stress management. If we carry our burdens all the time, sooner or later, as the burden becomes increasingly heavy, we won't be able to carry on.

As with the glass of water, you have to put it down for a while and rest before holding it again. When we're refreshed, we can carry on with the burden."

"So, before you return home tonight, put the burden of work down. Don't carry it home. You can pick it up tomorrow. Whatever burdens you're carrying now, let them down for a moment if you can. Relax; pick them up later after you've rested. Life is short. Enjoy it!"

The above article was written to address stress management in general. As we well know, stress is one very real part of the grief scenario and this article is very insightful.

MEETING TOPICS—ANNAPOLIS

June 2 - Memorializing Our Children: Garden Memorial Stones

Many bereaved parents seek ways to memorialize their deceased children and to keep their memories fresh in the minds of family, friends, and the community. Fran Palmer will discuss the making of garden memorial stones and, during the sharing group period of the evening, will lead a workshop for those interested in making the stones

If you plan to participate in the workshop, bring with you small items to personalize your stone. These items should be mementos which remind you of your child. E.g., Fran's stone has a small plastic baseball from one of Scott's birthday cakes. It has a small rubber turtle, that looks like his pet. It has small shells he had in his room from their many trips to the beach, which she used to make the shape of a butterfly. Be sure the objects are waterproof if you are going to use the stone outside. Fran will bring some things with her (e.g., cement, round and square pans, little objects).

July 7 - No Topic Scheduled At this time.

WHAT ABOUT ME?

Have you ever felt that, as a surviving brother or sister, we are often forgotten? I have felt this way quite often in the last six years. Over time, the feeling becomes less and less. Our parents' grief is so much different from ours. No more or less hurtful than ours, but different. They lost their child. I hope that, in my lifetime, I never have to know how that feels. I know how painful it was when Sean died. I don't want to know the pain of having a child die.

But, often times, we are the "forgotten mourners". I love my brother very much and miss him just as much. I think that people sometimes forget that we are hurting also. My parents were offenders of that too.

I know they know my sister and I were hurting, but they were so wrapped up in what they were feeling that they didn't have time to worry about what we were feeling. I tried so hard to make my parents well again that I neglected my grief. Pretty much denied it. We really want to make our families "normal" again.

I have had some awful things said to me over the last six years. Two weeks after Sean died, someone said to me, "Well, you do still have a sister."

Well, yes, I do still have a sister, but that still doesn't lessen the pain of my brother's death and my sister can't possibly replace my brother. Probably the worst thing anyone has said to me is "Why aren't you over this? Sean has been dead for six months." Well, it is not something you just "get over."

I have learned a lot of things over the years and if I hadn't been in such a state of shock, maybe I would have had some good responses. When I think back on it, I wish I had. I have decided that, from what I have learned, I need to educate people and make them understand that siblings and friends have the right to grieve too.

As surviving siblings and friends, we also have to realize that we need to find a new "normal." We also need to know that it's okay to feel all of the things that we feel, be it anger, sadness, guilt or any other emotion.. Just know that you're not crazy or wrong to grieve. Know also that it is all right to think and talk about them when you're ready, not when someone else says or thinks you should be ready. Death and grieving are, unfortunately, a part of life.

A Million Times
~By Ann Herndon

A million times we've needed you,
A million times we've cried.
If love alone could have saved you,
You never would have died.
In life we loved you dearly,
In death we love you still.
In our hearts you hold a place,
No one will ever fill.
It broke our hearts to lose you,
But you didn't go alone.
Part of us went with you,
The day God took you home.

On Picking Up the Pieces

Had someone say to me not too long ago that she was glad to see that I was "picking up the pieces and going on." Well, I am picking up the pieces all right – but what she doesn't know is that they're almost a whole set of new pieces! I haven't been able to go on as though nothing about me has changed since my child died. I am a different me, and I am still learning how the new me reacts to old situations. I am finding that this new set of pieces doesn't exactly fit together all nice and neat like a jigsaw puzzle. Some of the old pieces are still hanging in there, but they don't quite mesh with some of the new pieces. I am in the process of grinding off the rough edges now, hoping eventually for a better fit, one that I can live with more comfortably. Time, patience and hard work are helping me accomplish this.

How are the rough edges on your new pieces coming along?

Mary Cleckley
TCF, Atlanta, GA

The bond among grieving parents is close. It is unfathomable. It cannot be entered into by outsiders, but it is known to each of us. A quick look, an acknowledgement, and we know immediately the agenda of suffering we have in common and that there is no fact of our lives more important than this:

I had a child who died.

The Class of 1996

Spring has finally arrived. The sun is warm, the grass is green, the trees have leaves and the world once again seems to have come alive. As a bereaved parent this has traditionally been a difficult time of year for me. Somehow all the signs of spring were not able to warm my heart and I often found myself hating the fact that they tried.

One sign of spring that was always painful was school graduations. You see my daughter died as a freshman in high school and never did get to graduate. The excitement of graduation, the moving on to a new era, another stage of life was something that she looked forward to. She was excited to graduate from elementary school and move on to middle school. She was ecstatic about graduating from middle school to moving on to high school and, although she was only a freshman, was already getting excited about and looking forward to graduating from high school and going on to college. Since her death however there wasn't a new era for me to move on to.

I became a member of BPUSA in the spring of 1996. That same year was the graduation year for several other members of our chapter. We all graduated from a "normal life" into one that was full of unknowns, grief and darkness. I think of this group as my "graduating class" or the "Class of 1996."

My graduating class started its journey on New Years Day and finished it up on Labor Day weekend. We seemed to have hit most of the holidays of the year including Easter and the 4th. As I look back on that year, somehow this seems to have added some extra significance to our losses.

It has now been nine years since our class was "formed up." During those nine years we've all been on a journey none of us wanted but one which we've all traveled and learned from. Many times we've learned from each other. Many times we've learned from "classes" that came ahead of and behind ours. I think in our own minds we don't think that we've come very far. But this graduation season I've taken the time to reflect on our class and our journey and my observations have been surprising.

In actuality I find that we've all grown probably to a much greater extent than any of us would give ourselves credit for. We've addressed legal challenges to gain access to our grand children, we've gone back to school and earned advanced degrees, we've become active in lobbying the state legislature to improve the driving laws of our state and we've taken on new and more responsible job challenges. We've had many successes and some failures. We've had some victories and some defeats. We've had some joys and also some new sorrows but somehow we've kept moving forward. And through it all we've remained active in our chapter. To a large extent I think that the special bonds that are developed and the support we have been able to receive and give through our BPUSA Chapter has been one of the biggest factors that has gotten us to where we are. Still standing and moving forward!!!

So in this graduation season of 2005 I'd just like to say Congratulations and Thank You to my fellow class members and to those in the classes that have come ahead and behind ours. Ours is a hard road but it is the one we must travel. We have all graduated with the loss of our children into a life we did not choose but to one in which we have somehow found a way to not just live and survive but also in some way to thrive.

Bereaved Parents of the USA CREDO

We are the parents whose children have died. We are the grandparents who have buried grandchildren. We are the siblings whose brothers and sisters no longer walk with us through life. We come together as Bereaved Parents of the USA to provide a haven where all bereaved families can meet and share our long and arduous grief journeys. We attend monthly gatherings whenever we can and for as long as we believe necessary. We share our fears, confusion, anger, guilt, frustrations, emptiness and feelings of hopelessness so that hope can be found anew. As we accept, support, comfort, and encourage each other, we demonstrate to each other that survival is possible. Together we celebrate the lives of our children, share the joys and triumphs as well as the love that will never fade. Together we learn how little it matters where we live, what our color or our affluence is or what faith we uphold as we confront the tragedies of our children's deaths. Together, strengthened by the bonds we forge at our gatherings, we offer what we have learned to each other and to every more recently bereaved family. We are the Bereaved Parents of the USA.

We welcome you.
