HAPPY NEW YEAR

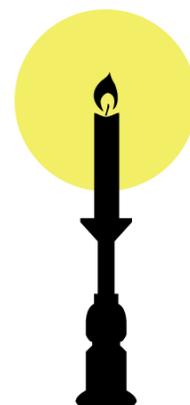

Let There Be Light?

By Sascha Wagner

The new year comes when all the world is ready for changes, resolutions – great beginnings.

For us, to whom that stroke of midnight means a missing child remembered, for us the new year comes more like another darkness.

But let us not forget that this may be the year when love and hope and courage
find each other somewhere in the darkness
to lift their voice and speak:
let there be light.

Grief fills the room of my absent child
Lies in his bed, walks up
and down with me,
Puts on his pretty looks,
repeats his words,
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then have I reason to be fond of grief?

Chapter Leader Message

New Year's Resolutions...or NOT

By Carol Tomaszewski,
BP/USA Anne Arundel County Chapter, Maryland

For years, I have tried to make New Year's Resolutions, such as exercise more, lose weight, follow a budget, etc. But I never seemed to be able to stick to those resolutions. And now I believe that by making these resolutions, I was really setting myself up for failure because when you resolve to do something it is either done...or NOT. And I have never completed any of my resolutions.

So now I am going to set goals for myself. In my eyes, one can work toward a goal. And every step you take along the way that gets you closer to the goal is a successful achievement.

This year I am going to work on the following goals:

- Support my family by creating more "family" time together
- Take better care of myself, both physically and emotionally
- Focus on memories of love and happy times as I continue to grieve
- As Chapter Leader, do the best I can to provide positive support to all of you

The hardest goals for me to achieve will be the last two. There are times throughout the year when it is almost impossible to focus on memories of love and happy times because my heart and soul are permanently scarred by the loss of my son, Dave. But I hope to find the strength and willpower to continue to take small steps toward reaching my goal. I know that coming to the monthly meetings, talking with others and participating in Chapter activities will support me in my efforts.

In order to reach my goal as Chapter Leader to provide positive support to all of you, I will need your help. Several things I am thinking about ---

- I would like to provide more focused support for the newly bereaved...and
- I would like to provide opportunities for you to take steps to move forward along your life journey while dealing with your grief.

So I am asking for your help. First, tell me what you have found helpful at our monthly meetings, and what else we might do to support the newly bereaved. Send your thoughts to my email: chapterleaderaacountynd@gmail.com.

Over the years, I have found that reaching out to support others has been very helpful to me. I wanted to try to "pay forward" for all the support I got when I first came to our Chapter meetings. I started attending Core Group meetings, then volunteering for jobs that didn't require a major commitment--like helping with the newsletter publication, coordinating refreshments, doing an occasional meeting opening. I thought I was only helping others, but I was actually helping myself learn to live with my grief.

So I ask you to consider volunteering to support our Chapter activities. I believe you will find positive healing for yourself in addition to helping others. I hope you are able to set some goals for yourself this year.

And please --- Set a goal to --- Help me...To help you....To help others.
 Thank you.

Love is stronger than death
 even though it can't stop death from happening,
 but no matter how hard death tries it can't separate people from love. It can't take away our memories either.
 In the end, life is stronger than death.

January Warmth
 Like a tree in winter which has lost its leaves,
 We look ahead to spring for new growth
 and the warmth of the sun
 to heal the pain in our hearts.
 Let us make January a time we reach out to each other,
 We will all show new growth

Next Meeting: Thursday, January 8th, 2015 at 7:30 p.m.

NOTE DATE CHANGE DUE TO HOLIDAY

Our new Chapter Leader, Carol Tomaszewski will speak on her journey through the years since her son David's death.

Calvary United Methodist Church • 301 Rowe Boulevard • Annapolis, MD 21401
Sharing groups, a key part of each Chapter meeting, will be held as desired for first-time attendees, and the newly and non-newly bereaved. Meetings are held on the first Thursday of every month beginning at 7:30 p.m. and are open to anyone grieving the death of a child. Come around to the back of the church -- there is parking and an entrance directly into our meeting room. Doors open at 7:15 p.m.

We are a self-help support organization dedicated to assisting parents, grandparents, aunts, uncles and siblings toward the positive resolution of grief following the death of a child. We provide information and education to extended family and friends. Our greatest strength as bereaved families is the unity we find in shared experiences which can lead us out of isolation, give us a place to "belong," and offer us hope that together – we can make it.

WHAT TO EXPECT AT OUR CHAPTER MEETINGS: Our Chapter gathers one evening a month to address topics and offer support to those who are mourning the death of a child. Our meetings last for approximately 2 hours. Sometimes we schedule a 30-minute presentation at the beginning of our meeting. When the speaker or panel has concluded the presentation, we introduce ourselves and say our child's name. We then take a short break before dividing into sharing groups. Sharing groups are facilitated by fellow Chapter members and are completely confidential. During this time, the issues that are discussed—particularly for the newly bereaved—focus on the issues facing participants today.

Submissions for the February newsletter are due to the Newsletter Team by January 10.

'Life After the Death of My Son: What I'm Learning'

by Dennis L. Apple. 192 p. Beacon Hill Press of Kansas City.
$10.08

This memoir is excellent for bereaved parents. It is raw, yet gentle and relatable. Apple uses his journals to take us back to the sudden loss of his 18-year-old son. Rather than giving advice, Apple's approach is to share the hard-earned personal insight he gleaned while fighting to maintain his marriage, his faith, and his will to live. For Siblings

The Unique Nature of Sibling Loss By Tabitha Jaynes (2011)

I can still remember the call that told me my younger brother was dead. It was from my grandmother. Funnily enough, I'd been contemplating that my grandparents were getting old and that I needed to prepare myself for their deaths. I never expected that I would receive a call from them to tell me that my brother had crashed his car into a lamp post on the way home from a concert and was killed immediately. He was 17; I was 22.

The death of a sibling is strange. Everyone asks how your parents are, but everyone seems to forget about you. It's as if you are not important. Your role is there to provide support to everyone else. Somehow it didn't surprise me when I went looking for information on the internet and found that siblings were known as the "forgotten mourners."

The relationship between siblings is unique. There is no one else in the world that you have such a love-hate relationship with. I know that I would curse my brother harshly but if anyone else did, then I would attack them for it. Siblings have a right that no one else has. It means that you can show your worst to them and know that they will still forgive you afterwards and speak to you like nothing was wrong.

Some people attribute this gift to parents too. Yet it is different. As a sibling, you are allowed to know hidden activities, beliefs, attitudes and dreams that are never shared with parents. As your sibling grows older this perspective can be transferred to partners but siblings seem to share the most information.

When you lose a sibling, you also lose your identity. Your sibling has always been part of your life. They have helped define who you are and your role within the family. It leads you to question who you are and what your life purpose is.

If you are young like myself, you also lose the chance to develop a relationship based on friendship with someone who has known you your whole life. I know that my relationship with my brother was changing as he died. Although he was my younger brother, his wisdom at times made him appear to be my older brother. I was grateful for someone who was looking out for me. And I was so angry that this had been taken away from me. I was also angry that I would never see him get married, have children or grow old so I could tease him about how ugly he was getting.

Your sibling is also your peer, so it leads you to question your own mortality. It also leads you to question why them and not me. In my attempt to make sense of this question, I moved into the realm of helping others affected by loss transform grief, find peace and feel more positive about the future. It was my way of justifying my brother's death.

It's now been over 8 years since my brother died, and I am at peace with it. It's ok that I'll never fight with him again or hug and make up. It's ok that I'll never know what man he would have grown into. I still think about him every day and I talk to him a lot. I've created a new relationship with him that continues on after death. After all, he is my brother and always will be. Not even death can take that away from me.

Neil Armstrong: The Inspiring Legacy of 'Muffy'

By Ben Evans, AmericanSpace.org

Much has been written over the years about the effect of his daughter's death upon his future career as an astronaut. Photo Credits: NASA

Three generations of human beings (and countless more yet to be born) have been and will be inspired by the accomplishments of Neil Armstrong, including many readers of this site and the entire AmericaSpace team of writers. Yet the great man himself drew his own inspiration from various boyhood and lifetime heroes: from his parents, Steve and Viola, who instilled a work ethic from a young age, to Charles Lindbergh, the first man to fly solo across the Atlantic, and Chuck Yeager, the first man to burst through the sound barrier...to Armstrong's own infant daughter, Karen. And it is the tragically inspiring tale of Karen – whom Armstrong and his first wife, Janet, nicknamed 'Muffy' – which is amongst the most heart-rending and touching of his entire life.

Karen entered the world on 13 April 1959 and departed it in the most appalling of circumstances, less than three years later. According to James Hansen, in his acclaimed biography First Man, Armstrong chose the nickname 'Muffy' or 'Muffie' as "an endearing form of Muffin". One day, not long after her second birthday, the little girl suffered a fall in the park which produced a nasty bump to the head. She returned home with a nose-bleed and concussion, but by that evening things took a distinctly uglier turn: for Muffy's eyes seemed not to be functioning correctly. Several visits to doctors and ophthalmologists seemed unable to cure the problem: the girl tripped frequently, her eyes were crossed and she was unable to speak coherently.

Subsequent medical investigation revealed that Muffy had a glioma of the pons – a malignant tumour in the base of her brain stem – and although relatively rare in children, the prognosis for recovery (even today) remains poor. X-ray treatments to reduce the size of the tumour hit the little girl particularly hard, rendering her unable to walk, stand – but, according to Janet, quoted by Hansen, "she never, ever complained". Armstrong was at the time a test pilot at Edwards Air Force Base in California, and his flight logs reveal that he took time off in June and July 1961 to be with Muffy at the hospital. Slowly, she learned to crawl again, her eyes straightened and she returned home to the Armstrongs' Juniper Hills cabin. Despite her apparent positive response to the radiation therapy, and the eternal hope and optimism, Armstrong's brother-in-law, the physician Jack Hoffmann, was convinced that Muffy would not survive more than six months.

By the end of 1961, the symptoms returned and the only option was cobalt treatment. This was relatively new at the time and although it could destroy the cancerous cells, it also irreparably harmed healthy ones, too, and little Muffy could not take it. At length, the doctors sat down with the Armstrongs and recommended that she would be happier at home. "She made it through Christmas," Janet told Hansen, but admitted that "she couldn't walk by this time – she could crawl – but she was still able to enjoy Christmas. It seems like the day Christmas was over, she just went downhill. It just overcame her."

Muffy died on 28 January 1962. It was the Armstrongs' sixth wedding anniversary.

The Flight Research Center at Edwards Air Force Base grounded all of its aircraft on the day of her funeral, as a mark of respect. Despite his grief, Armstrong returned stoically to work on his various projects, including the F5D Skylancer, the X-20 Dyna-Soar and the X-15. In April 1962, he flew to an altitude of 207,500 feet in the X-15, but held the aircraft's nose up for too long during descent, causing the vehicle to 'bounce' off the atmosphere, back up to 140,000 feet, and Armstrong overshot his landing site by more than 40 miles. He turned back towards the landing area and managed to touch down safely, narrowly missing a patch of Joshua trees at the south end of the runway.

Much has been written over the years that it was Muffy's death which inspired Armstrong to enter the hallowed ranks of NASA and its astronaut corps. This is not entirely accurate, for he had already been selected in 1958 for the Air Force's Man in Space Soonest (MISS) project and for Boeing's Dyna-Soar. (In fact, on 15 March 1962, only weeks after his daughter's death, Armstrong was named as one of six pilots to fly Dyna-Soar. Unfortunately, the project was later cancelled.) Meanwhile, his application to join NASA's second astronaut class arrived a week after the 1 June 1962 deadline, but Dick Day, assistant head of Flight Crew Operations, had previously worked with Armstrong at Edwards and quietly slipped it into the pack before anyone noticed. "He was so far and away the best qualified... [that] we wanted him in."

In James Hansen's biography of Armstrong, it is difficult to discern a link between the tragedy of Muffy's passing and his own application to enter the rank of the NASA astronauts. "The death of his little girl," remembered his sister, June, "caused him to invest those energies into something very positive and that's when he started into the space programme." By his own admission, Armstrong was excited by the X-15 – it was real and even the Dyna-Soar was a realistic possibility – but President John Kennedy's lunar goal "was just so overpoweringly exciting that I decided to give us these other opportunities to pursue it". Years later, Armstrong credited Dick Day (who died in 2004) with having enabled him to make the decision to transfer from Edwards to Houston.

Certainly, by the midsummer of 1962, several newspapers, including the Washington Evening Star on 18 July, were predicting the selection of Armstrong as NASA's first civilian astronaut. The Star even made a quirkily prophetic comment: "Conceivably," the newspaper told its readers, "he could command America's first attempt to land men on the Moon." Even future Apollo 11 crewmate Mike Collins, who also applied for selection in 1962, but was ultimately picked as an astronaut a year later, wrote to his father of his conviction that Armstrong would probably be on NASA's list of selectees, "unless his physical discloses some major problem". According to Collins, Armstrong "has by far the best background of...the civilians under consideration".

On 13 September, Armstrong received the telephone call from Deke Slayton, asking him to join the NASA corps. Two days later, he checked into Houston's Rice Hotel, under the assumed name of 'Max Peck', to meet the eight other new astronauts – Frank Borman, Pete Conrad, Jim Lovell, Jim McDivitt, Elliot See, Tom Stafford, Ed White and John Young – and their managers and be formally introduced to the world's press. Years later, this astronaut class, which came to be nicknamed 'The New Nine', would be recognized by many as one of the finest all-round groups ever selected by NASA...and Armstrong stood out among them. Although he was not the only civilian (for Elliot See was a civilian pilot for General Electric, albeit with a naval background), Armstrong was alone in the class for having flown a rocket-propelled aircraft and had just recently won the coveted Octave Chanute Award for the pilot who had contributed most to the aerospace sciences that year.

In February 1965, Armstrong received his first space mission assignment, albeit in a backup capacity, to shadow Gordon Cooper as command pilot of Gemini V. Working with his own pilot, Elliot See, and the prime pilot, Pete Conrad, the foursome immersed themselves in the minutiae of an extremely challenging mission which would attempt to seize from the Soviet Union the record for the longest manned flight. In fact, the impromptu motto for Gemini V was 'Eight Days or Bust'. A few weeks after Cooper and Conrad returned from space, and Armstrong was thus freed from his own mission duties, he was named as command pilot of the Gemini VIII prime crew, teamed with pilot Dave Scott. The trials and tribulations of this flight were discussed in yesterday's article and the sheer volume of scheduled tasks and their inherent complexity – performing the first rendezvous and docking in space with an unmanned target vehicle, followed by co-ordinated maneuvers, a tricky EVA and a precision splashdown in the Atlantic Ocean – suggests the confidence in which Armstrong and his abilities were held by NASA brass.

The question of whether Muffy's death thus inspired Neil Armstrong to turn from his career as a civilian test pilot, flying the X-15 and pointed towards Dyna-Soar, and enter the astronaut corps in Houston, remains unanswered. Certainly, many of his colleagues at Edwards were surprised in the summer of 1962 when they learned of his selection, for Armstrong had given no hint of making any such move. In their own admissions to James Hansen, Armstrong's family members revealed that the future First Man on the Moon suffered greatly in the wake of Muffy's death, but chose to display a face of stoicism and used his work as a coping mechanism. However, it would be a comforting thought to suppose that perhaps a combination of Armstrong's own genius and the memory of his little daughter served to guide his steps further than any human had ever travelled before.

(Note: Armstrong died in Cincinnati, Ohio, on August 25, 2012, at the age of 82, He was buried at sea.)

Chapter Notes: Upcoming Meetings & Announcements

Annual Service of Remembrance - We want to once again thank Ann Castiglia for another beautiful memorial service for our children. Some members of the Core Group thought it was appropriate to give Ann a gift for her 30 years of support to our Chapter. She sent all of us this note below:

My dear dear friends,

What a privilege and honor it has been for me to be involved with our Memorial Service these past 30 years. I was truly humbled with your honoring me at this my final year as chair of the memorial service programs. My heart was beating so fast I did not know what was happening at first, then....I guess it wasn't until the next day when this all settled in.

I am so grateful to our Core Group and all who contribute to my beautiful angel and gift card. I want you all to know that our Tria would love this angel. Thank you for honoring me but please know I could not do this without a great deal of help. I have noticed over the past few years that I am beginning to forget things. I know it is a fact that I have grown older, but I had a hard time this past year putting this all together. I never ever want to leave a child's name (or spell their name wrong) out of the program. There is a deadline that must be followed by the program designer and printers. I always have a lot of anxiety because I want the program to be perfect.

It truly has been a privilege to have been so involved all these years. June Erickson has now taken on this role and I know she will do a great job. She also designed the boxes your bulbs were in this year. She is very talented and a lovely person with a heart to serve.

Thank you to all those who have come and been such an important part of my life. I hope to see everyone at next years service and in the meantime I will be at the monthly meetings.

*Love and Blessings to each of you.
Ann (Castiglia)*
